A " Planter " writing to the Montgomery Mail asserts that the cotton crep for 1869 will be one-third less than that o 1868, and gives the following reasons: 1. The season has been most unfavora de. The wet spring has retarded the dowing and preparation of the land, and a some instances prevented it altogether

2. The labor is much less in number and effectiveness than last year. Experience teaches us that every year takes from the number and efficiency of the hands. The women have almost entirely left the helds. Many hands who saved money from last year's crop, are this year spending it in the enjoyment of ease. Of the others who saved money some have gone "to farming to themselves." Now, these negroes, while valuable as members of society in their sphere, do not produce as much cotton a when they worked with the large planter ore polatoes, and less cotton than forming gentlemen," and we find quite a de-duction from the force of 1888, Again, the natural decrease, made by leath, must be considered. The young men and youths, who suddenly became masters of themselves, diedeway in large those at the earry, just across the river and again, we all know how fatal th smallpox was to the negro, in the year 1866. Disease and want have taken away the generation which should fill the places of the old and those who die. The in-erease does not keep pace with the dea. The seed is very bad this year. So gular fatality seems to have attende the efforts of all who tried to save seed Few planters have enough seed, some have only half enough. The delay and trouble in getting seed has put back planting in some instances at least two weeks. The same cause, the rottenness of seed, will cause and "stands," replant-ing, and late crops. The worms get a fair

The Economist says of the condition an prospect of the English cotton trade: The condition of the English cottor trade still presents the same features of dullness that have characterized it for some time past. In Manchester, pro-duction is limited to the supply of name-diate demand, and manufacturers manifest an extreme unwillingness to engage in any speculative undertakings. They are, for the most part, only working to all actual onlers. The market for manufactured goods is restricted by the extreme caution of buyers and sellers. Each party is represented as awaiting concessions, and it was thought that a slight reduction of prices would lead to a more

So fur, these hopes have not been real ized. It is a singular feature that, not with-standing the decreased production, there is no perceptible improvement in the market. The demand for consumption. does not improve, and the prospect for spinners at the commencement of the present month was disheartening. The diminution of production may be estimated from the fact that from January 1 to May 1, 1869, the trade took 2!2,000 bales of cotton less than during the corresponding period last year. The strike in President of and the other leading manufacturing centers limited the supply of manufacturing depired, a specific for flatulency and sour stomach, a gentle district, a revine, a blood depired, a specific for sick-headache, a mild anodyne, and, above all, as a properties and interest of the country of high character and influence in the country of high character and influence does not improve, and the prospect for spinners at the commencement of the for the supply of absolute wants, are un-saleable at reduced rates, and, as the desaleable at reduced rates, and, as the de-mand is extremely limited at present quo-tations, it will be seen that the market is just now full or difficulties. Spinners certainly cannot afford to make any con-cession. The present rates of the raw material scarcely leave a margin for profit, and it is doubtful whether the reduction that has been effected of five per cent. in wages will stimulate the market, and cover the losses of which many many facturers complain turn to the English cotton trade without a larger supply of the raw material, or an advance in the prices of manufactured goods. Of the former contingency, there is no present probability As we have stated, the diminu tlon of consumption during this year was 212,000 bales less than last year. The experts of cotton from England was 100,000 bales less during the same period as compared with last year, yet the stock in land and at sea was $0,000 bales less on the 1st of May, 1869, than at the corres-ponding period in 1868. These figures ex-plain why the price of the raw material has been sustained in the place of a small
